

Whitney donates land for childhood development center

By Frances K. Foster

Staff reporter

The Sheridan Economic and Educational Development Authority Joint Powers Board must raise funds to demolish the brick building at the southwest corner of Brundage and Custer streets before constructing the Hand-In-Hand early childhood development center there, said JPB Chairman Tom Sachse.

The Sheridan College board of trustees has scheduled a special meeting at 7 a.m. Friday to accept a gift of the land and building from Whitney Benefits Inc. and then to convey the gift to the JPB for the center.

The one-story building with a basement was built in the 1950s and served as Sheridan County School District 2's maintenance department office until 2005. It has not been used by the district since then, said Facilities Director Julie Carroll.

Representatives from District 2, Sheridan College, and the city serve on the JPB, for which the Wyoming Business Council has approved two $1.5 million grants to construct the center.

The grants do not cover the demolition cost of the brick building, Sachse said.

The JPB will meet Tuesday in closed session to discuss fundraising options, he said.

The JPB will also work with Sheridan Quality Child Care Initiative Inc. — which will supervise operation of the completed center — on fundraising ideas, said Vice Chairman Mark Englert.

Demolition could cost anywhere between $25,000 and $80,000, he said.

The Sheridan Economic and Educational Development Authority Joint Powers Board must raise funds to demolish this brick building at the southwest corner of Brundage and Custer streets.

The Sheridan Press/Michael Sullivan

Plans in play for child-care center near old CMS site

By Josh Mitchell

Staff reporter

Big Horn developer Paul DelRossi said in a public meeting Oct. 29 that he planned to put a child-care center on the former Central Middle School site, but now it appears the plan has changed.

Whitney Benefits Board President Tom Kinnison announced Tuesday that Whitney Benefits has given the former Central Middle School maintenance building site at the southwest corner of Custer and Brundage streets to Sheridan College for the child-care center.

Kinnison said the property is

• Is Loucks Street extension back on the table?

appraised at $426,000 and is about 1.25 acres.

The site is across the street from the former CMS site, where DelRossi had said he would put the child-care center.

DelRossi also said at the Oct. 29 meeting he opposed extending Loucks Street through the former CMS site to create an east/west corridor for city traffic, because it would interfere with his plans to build the child-care center and homes on the 4.99 acres.

Now that the child-care center is apparently not going on the site, it is unclear if DelRossi will allow Loucks Street to go through the property.

DelRossi has an option to purchase the former school site from Whitney Benefits. He could not be reached for comment.

Mayor Dave Kinskey said he still thinks DelRossi will oppose the Loucks Street extension.

"I think what he (DelRossi) said is that he didn't want his chunk of property cut in two," Kinskey said. "It was never about the child-care center."

Kinnison said he does not know if DelRossi will allow the road extension. DelRossi had said he would locate the child-care center on the site at the foot of where Loucks Street now ends.

HKM Engineer Jeff Rosenlund of Sheridan, who is heading the city's new transportation plan, has said Loucks Street is the best option for an east/west corridor for city traffic.

Extending Loucks through the former school site would allow for a connection with Sheridan Avenue.

Alternatives to Loucks for an east/west corridor are Brundage, Works and Burkitt streets, but those won't work as well, Rosenlund has said.

Rosenlund has also said the City Council should consider taking the site by eminent domain if DelRossi blocks the road extension.

City Councilors Marc Ketcham and Kathy Kennedy have said they would consider eminent domain for the site, while the other city councilors and the mayor say they are opposed.

Please see CMS site, Page 2